Basics of Genealogy Reference

Jack Simpson has launched a new "Basics of Genealogy Reference" blog. Jack is the Curator of Local and Family History at the Newberry Library in Chicago and is a recognized genealogy expert. He recently published his book, Basics of Genealogy Reference, and the blog is to supplement the book with new material as it becomes available. For example, the book mentions read Jack Simpson's new "Basics of Genealogy Reference" blog briefly. It had just been created as a new Web site. Now it is a major source for genealogical data.

FamilySearch Labs has a new suite of digital tools created by the Family History Library. The Lab's Record Search tool is of particular interest. It can search digitized documents consisting of many types, using a complex search. It has the ability to display any of the document found in the search. On his blog, Jack Simpson has documented four case studies which illustrate the search capability of the FamilySearch Labs search tool.

Of Interest

National Heraldic Register Proposed

A new bill has been introduced in Seanad Éireann (Irish Senate) by Senator Alex White that will establish a sound legislative basis for all Grants of Arms made by the Chief Heralds of Ireland from 1943 and clarify related matters. The National Library last year stopped the Office of the Chief Herald from making any further awards of arms due to concerns that it had no legal powers to do so. The bill retroactively restores authority for the grants and gives the Chief Heralds credibility in making further Grants of Arms. You can read the proposed legislation The National Cultural Institutions (Amendment) Bill, 2008, at:
